

For Michael's birthday he gets a gun that has been passed down from his grandfather. At his birthday party he decides he wants to show his best friend, Joe. Not really thinking about how far a bullet could go Michael and Joe go into the woods to fire off the gun in a random direction. That same day in the same town a few streets over Jenna's dad is patching in a leak on the roof. When all of the sudden he falls off dead by a bullet that came from nowhere. The next day Michael wakes up and gets ready to go take his driver's test. On the way there he picks up Joe. When they are almost there a news story comes on the radio. A news story about a man in the same town being shot by a bullet out of nowhere around noon, the same time Michael fired off his gun. When Joe hears this story he wants to not tell anyone. He thinks it would be better off for both of them. For weeks Michael had a ton of guilt and he just could not seem to get rid of it. Jenna goes through everything to try to figure out who was the one that killed her father. Finally when the cops had a suspect it wasn't Michael, but Joe.

Will Michael confess?

To me the book wasn't that great because all it talked about was Jenna's dad getting shot. It had no other big events. The ending was bad because it did not tell you if Michael confessed or not. The book had no depth.
